Introduction

- Importance of understanding each individual's information behaviors
- Revealing information behaviors;
 - Questionnaires
 - Citation analyses
- Information behavior studies in the literature;
 - After Second World War
 - "the study of information-seeking behavior can be said to be the study of scientists' information-seeking behavior" (Wilson, 1984)
 - 1967 INFROSS Project Social Sciences
 - In recent years Arts and Humanities

Aim of Study

- Evaluate scientific disciplines;
 - Pure Sciences
 - physics, chemistry, biology and mathematics
 - Social Sciences
 - history, economy, library and information science and education
 - Engineering
 - chemical engineering, computer engineering, electrical and electronic engineering
 - Arts and Humanities
 - art, philosophy and humanities
- For Turkey
- By using citation analysis

Research Questions

- Publication types?
- Average author number for each discipline?
- Single/multiple authorship?
- Citation half-life?
- Authors' choices?

Methodology

- Data source Web of Science
- Turkey addressed 197,687 publications
- 1928-2009
- Deep data cleaning and standardization process
- Limitations
 - Inequality of the data on Web of Science

Conclusion

- Articles are most preferred document type
 - Document types differ for each discipline
- Co-authorship is common for engineering and science
 - Arts and humanities have highest rate of single authorship
- Half-life is high for history and philosophy
 - Information science is closer to engineering
- Social scientists prefer Turkish journals for publication
- Impact factor is not a determiner
- A survey to collect data about journal selection criteria
- Results can help policy making and financial decision processes
